Heart to Heart

The two hearts are symbolic of the patient on the left and the doctor (or medical student) on the right. The image shows, in a literal manner, how medicine can go beyond medical science and connect people on a deeper level via the patient-doctor relationship. As I've encountered patients in the clinical setting, I've been honored and humbled by the lives and stories patients share during our brief interaction; for me, that is where true healing begins in medicine. Those moments of vulnerability and connection are beautiful, as if a little of our hearts are exposed to one another.

White Coat in the Family

Children of physicians (or medical students), should be cognizant that, no matter which role the parent is in, the child remains at the center of their lives. This drawing is a visual representation of the doctor in the family.

Children can get creative by drawing clothes/faces on the figures. Maybe there is one doctor in the family, maybe there are two. A parent who is a doctor is just one of the many roles they put on and take off.

* This drawing is from personal experience; it is not representative of all family types.
